

Two thick black L-shaped bars are positioned on the left and right sides of the page. The left bar starts at the top left and extends downwards and then horizontally to the right. The right bar starts at the top right and extends downwards and then horizontally to the left. They frame the central text.

SPARTAN AUCTION

By. Annica, Jasiara, & David

CUSTOMER

By. Annica

Cases

- In the Spartan Auction App allows the Customer to sign-up or login into the app, the choice is optional at first
- If they choose to sign-up or login, they can be able to even modify their account
- You can then search for any items that you wish to bid on through either the home screen or the search bar
- And you are also able to even search for other users through the search bar
- If you choose to enter another user's account, you're able to view certain information like their ratings and auctions that they are currently holding.
- Once a user finds an auction, they choose to bid on they are brought to a page where they can select an any amount of money, they can bid but only if the bid is the highest,

PROVIDER

By. David

Cases

- For the provider they have the same amount of access like customers.
- For the provider, they can sign up to register for an auction.
- They can even make modifications to running registered auctions and even register for more
- The Provider can view certain information about their auctions like the all the amounts of money people had bid towards their auction.
- When the Provider goes to their profile, they can view the many comments and ratings that other users leave for them

ADMINISTRATOR

By. Jasiara

Cases

- When Admins login into Spartan Auction, they must use certain information to login and from this page they can also sign-up accounts for fresh new admins.
- The Admin had full management over all accounts and bid through a management page. From this page the Admin can either remove bids and even suspend, delete, or modify other users accounts. And even help users resets and change their passwords upon request.